Phoenix auth you own and can still update.

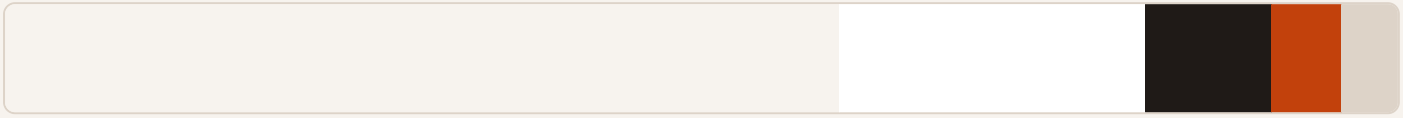

Production-minded authentication for Phoenix 1.8+

THREE RULES

1. The name is Sigra in a sentence and `sigra` in the logo, the package and commands. In Elixir module names it is `Sigra`.
2. The typemark is the logo: the word with its square. Put no shape behind it, and keep the tagline and the descriptor outside it.
3. A user's status is always written as a word. The status mark and its color support the word; they do not replace it.

TYPE

Phoenix auth you own and can still update.

Instrument Sans for the name, headlines, reading and tables, and Red Hat Mono for addresses and code.

VOICE

Plain and specific. It says what happened, to whom and what to do about it, and it says what Sigra does not do.

Name. Sigra in a sentence, `sigra` in the logo, the package and commands. The logo is the word with a square above the i, with no shape behind it and no tagline.

Where it shows. Full brand on Sigra's own pages; the typemark, the status marks and the type in the generated admin, for the host app's own team; never on the sign-in, registration or two-factor screens a host app's users see.
